

I wish to express my support for the rules limiting media ownership. These are good guidelines; they serve the public interest. Keep them in place!

Already the bulk of radio stations are owned by a single company. Not surprising, I find less diversity on the radio today than I found 20 years ago; despite an increase in the number of stations I can reach.

Similarly, despite the 50+ television stations I receive, I find less and less diversity of opinion or programming. When a single company owns various outlets, it does not (as some assert) promote different agendas for each one. Rather, each is limited to a single corporate vision.
